••• The Mount Rushmore Memorial
was the master work of American sculptor John Borglum.

The mountain carving is a national memorial, and the four presidents- chosen to represent the nation's birth and ideals-are George Washington, the first President, Thomas Jefferson, the third, Abraham Lincoln, the sixteenth, and Theodore Roosevelt, the twenty-sixth. The project was carved between 1927 and 1941 at a cost of $900,000. Over the fourteen years many miners and quarry-men worked on the project (360 total). As with any vast project, there is always one problem spot, and Jefferson's head was it. Due to poor rock conditions he was moved from the left of Washington to right of him. Borglum died on March 6, 1941 at the age of 73, shortly before the memorial was completed. The finishing touches were completed by his son, whose name is by no coincidence, Lincoln. •••Dashing Dave reeled back, "Deadwood Dick", he cried. "Deadwood Dick, the road-agent!" seconded the crowd, gathering around breathlessly, knives and pistols drawn in an instant. If this sounds like a passage from a nineteenth century dime store novel, well, it is, and so is Deadwood Dick. Edward Zume Carrol Judson wrote most of the Deadwood Dick dime store novels and made this colorful character as real as any others living in the Deadwood area. Although many people claimed to have met Deadwood Dick and even gunned him down, their stories were only fiction. But their emotions were the real McCoy.
